Cops beat McGill student

The Montreal police force's continuing campaign of on-campus harassment of McGill students claimed a fresh victim late Wednesday night.

This time the student in question was not a political activist, or a long-haired "freak", but a short-haired, clean-cut, apolitical first-year dentistry student, Roger Harrington, who was attacked and beaten by two plainclothesmen when he failed to identify himself to their satisfaction.

The incident, which was witnessed by a number of passers-by, began around ten o'clock Wednesday night as Harrington was heading down University street after an evening of floor hockey at the Currie Gym.

He had just about reached the entrance to the campus by the Strathcona Medical Building when a white unmarked car drew up beside him. Two burly men dressed in ski jackets and jeans jumped out and one of them pointed a finger at Harrington and, without identifying himself, ordered him to halt.

Not knowing what these two strangers wanted with him, but not inclined to stay and find out, Harrington took off as fast as he could, through the Strathcona gates onto the campus. The two plainclothesmen caught up with him and wrestled him to the ground by the sheds facing the Eaton Laboratory.

A wild struggle ensued, and lasted for about ten minutes with the 150 pound Harrington at a distinct disadvantage.

Later Harrington would remark that he felt the only reason he still had all his teeth, and both his testicles, was because he had left the gym still wearing his mouthguard and jock.

A sizeable crowd soon gathered, attracted by the strange struggle, and by Harrington's shouts for help.

Eventually someone in the crowd notified McGill security who in turn called the police.

An ordinary police cruiser soon appeared and Harrington was handcuffed and driven off to Station 10.

He was held for the night in the drunk tank and in the morning was charged with two counts of "assaulting an officer in the performance of his duty."

Attempts by university officials to have the charges dropped have been unsuccessful, as the police allege that Harrington "went for our guns." Roger Harrington, needless to say, could be in for a rough time. So far it is the word of the police against his.

Students demand day care

McGill student parents yesterday began an occupation of the eighth floor common room of the Leacock building in their continuing struggle for decent day-care services at McGill and the community.

The group insists that they will continue their occupation until the following demands are met:

- that McGill accept total responsibility for the establishment and maintenance of day care services which will adequately fulfill the needs of all students, staff, and local residents.

- that the administration take the necessary steps towards providing adequate space and facilities for immediate day care needs.

- that Doctors Bell and Frost personally meet with their representatives to negotiate these demands.

The McGill Baby Care co-op is being aided and supported in their struggle by the Women's Collective of Liberation School, professors Marlene Dixon of sociology and Pauline Vaillancourt of Political Science, and many interested students. Petitions and leaflets were circulated throughout campus demanding day care as a "right rather than a privilege."

At noon a teach-in on the situation drew over 100 students to the Union ballroom. There, the aims and tactics of the struggle came under attack from History professor Laurier LaPierre. "Do you think it's responsible to hold children on the eighth floor?" he asked, pointing out the inherent fire hazard. His major opposition, however, was towards those whom he feared would make most use of the day-care centre: "the comfortable bourgeois students with their $8000 grants". "How many kids are there belonging to the St. Henri community?" he challenged.

Marlene Dixon agreed that this was exactly the shortcoming of the proposed McGill Family Community Centre (MCFC) which will mainly provide services for a highly privileged group, the faculty and comfortable students.

The baby-sitting co-op that the group is fighting for would be available to the workers of McGill, the secretaries, janitors and students who really need the service.

"In Quebec there is a serious day-care problem. We must try to implement it for the workers here but we must try to raise the human political issues and we must raise these in general and at large," stated Dixon. She defended the "children's occupation of the eighth floor as the only alternative for the group in order to do something about the situation now." The babies were taken home in the evening.

Marlene Dixon also stressed the "rights of the fathers." "A father can't father his children in our society because he is away at work." You always hear about women who can't see and take care of their kids. This shows how important this issue is to men and women, mothers and fathers," she said.

LaPierre then asked who would be willing to provide day-care if their student fees were raised by one dollar. All the students in the room raised their hands.

Yesterday evening Sam Kingdon, director of university planning, telephoned the student parents, capitulating to their previous demand for the continued use of the old Spanish language laboratory as a baby-sitting co-op. He asked that the group

Dalhousie council ousts editor

HALIFAX (CUP)—The Dalhousie University student council January 28 overruled the staff of the student newspaper, The Dalhousie Gazette, and appointed one of their own council members, Ken McDougall, as editor of the paper for a one-year term.

The action was a violation of the Canadian University Press (CUP) statement of principles. The Gazette was a founding member of the 35-year-old student press organization.

The staff had elected Margaret Bezanson who worked on the paper for two years, as editor before the council meeting. However, under the student union constitution, this election had to be ratified by the council.

Both applicants were screened by the council applications committee and it recommended Bezanson for Gazette editor.

This is the first time in the Gazette's 105-year history that the staff's choice for editor has been overturned by the student council.

Bezanson fulfilled the qualifications for editor as outlined in the CUP constitution. McDougall, on the other hand, has very little experience with the paper. He worked for it for a few months last year, was unable to work with the staff, quit and ran for a position on the student council.

Bezanson planned to continue the policy of staff democracy and collective decision-making. McDougall intended to enforce his power as editor and carry on a form of autocracy. However, he did concede the supreme authority would be the student union.

The council overlooked the relative experience of both applicants and the fact that the present staff would strike if McDougall was chosen editor. It voted overwhelmingly in favor of McDougall.

Following the passage of the motion appointing McDougall editor, the Gazette staff, a majority of which attended the meeting, left. A motion was then made to make McDougall editor effective immediately. It was defeated. The motion was intended to prevent the present staff from publishing this week's issue of the Gazette, possibly the last one.

McDougall takes over the editorship Wednesday Jan 31, according to the Dalhousie student union by-laws.

A motion was also made and carried that the last issue put out by the present staff be screened and censored by a representative of the student council. This was carried out by the president, Brian Smith, and the chairman, Naderajah.

The action was supposedly to prevent any blatant slander of outside organizations or persons which would bring a lawsuit against the student union. The councillors thought this tactic was most likely to be taken by the Gazette staff in retaliation for the council's actions.

The real tragedy in Managua

The news item published below reveals the real tragedy of the Nicaraguan situation. It underscores the inability of the capitalist system to aid the victims of natural disasters.

In Managua tens of thousands were killed or injured. The city is in rubble. Two hundred thousand people are homeless and 250,000 unemployed.

What was the immediate response of the Somoza dictatorship of Nicaragua? It sent troops to guard the downtown stores, offices, and especially the banks. Troops were ordered to shoot "looters" on sight. The first priority of the capitalist Nicaraguan Government was to protect whatever private property was left, against the poor.

But what about the millions of dollars of relief aid from the US and other Capitalist governments? A report from Nicaragua in the New York Times (December 29, 1972) says that "observers could verify that refugees were receiving only a pittance five days after the national catastrophe, although there has been a huge flow of all kinds of aid from 24 countries."

Government bureaucrats responsible for distribution of the aid are simply enriching themselves.

Meanwhile, the United States Government is making a lot of noise about how humanitarian it is for sending aid to Managua. But according to the United States Agency for International Development, the US provided the measly sum of $3-million in relief supplies and other aid. Compare this token aid with Washington's enthusiasm in airlifting massive military aid to the Thieu regime when it appeared that a cease-fire might be agreed upon. Nixon rushed $300 million in aircraft alone to the Thieu dictatorship.

The hypocrisy of Nixon and Somoza contrasts with the real expressions of human solidarity from working people throughout the world. An example of such solidarity was the collection of aid by Puerto Rican baseball star, Robert Clemente, who died in a plane crash on his way to Nicaragua. Clemente wanted to go to Nicaragua to make sure the aid he collected got into the hands of those in need rather than profiteers.

With a socialist organization of society human beings will be able to effectively counteract these natural tragedies. A socialist government can help mobilize working people to send massive aid to their stricken brothers and sisters. It can distribute aid through the workers' and peasants' unions and other popular organizations. Such a government will, in short, work to alleviate human misery rather than to protect private property.

After the earthquake

While TV reports in the US showed a stricken Nicaraguan government doing all it could to help its people out of the earthquake tragedy, a different, more revealing picture of the fate of 400,000 Managuans was being shown on a Mexican TV documentary programme.

This two-hour programme showed hundreds of bodies thrown from trucks into collective graves and thousands of starved rioters in the streets of Managua.

"In Managua there is no water or food," said the narrator of the TV crew, while the cameras showed Nicaraguan government officials drinking whiskey in the garden of President Somoza's mansion.

US newspapers reported Somoza's decision to cut off food to the people in order to force them to leave the ruined city where they might die of disease.

They did not report, as was confirmed by Prensa Latina's Ernesto Jimenez in Managua, that "thousands of tons of food supplies are accumulating in the guarded warehouses, while people are desperately searching for crusts in this heap of rubble and pain that was once Managua."

On the road to Las Mercedes Airport a group of 300 to 400 peasants carrying signs reading "We Are Hungry", stopped the cars carrying foreign correspondents, the Mexican TV documentary reported, and told them that the food generously sent by international groups is not being distributed to the people. "The Army stockpiles the donations, but it doesn't distribute them," the people said before TV cameras.

There is no disinfection for the truckloads of bodies tossed into mass graves. "We don't have any disinfectants here", the cemetery manager told the Mexican TV reporter. "No one will claim these bodies; they're all poor people."

On the roads leading away from Managua, families wait for hours for transportation. Somoza has ordered the city evacuated but has provided no vehicles. The children cry from thirst, but there is no water.

The TV camera switches to the Somoza mansion. The garden is green, flower filled, with swimming pools and little ponds. On a table on the lawn, government ministers laugh together and drink whiskey as if they were spending a normal weekend, while they await Somoza.

Mexican reporter Alfonso Verdugo says on the screen, "This is a fortress in a rich sector where no house was destroyed or even damaged. It is protected by at least 12 tanks and hundreds of soldiers armed with machine guns. Getting in here was harder than pushing through the rubble of the leveled city."

At the bottom of the garden, the cabinet ministers have just been informed that "a riot is going on at a gas station. Some agitators rebelled and demanded food. They threatened to blow up the gas station."

Somoza has given the order to "shoot to kill" possible looters. Several people have been killed. A student leader charged that food distribution is "being conducted on an unfair basis with no care taken of the poorest, those who never have enough to eat and who now have nothing at all."

According to the Venezuelan newspaper El Globo, the earthquake destroyed the prison opposite the military school which housed political prisoners of the regime.

The 150 who survived the earthquake were machine-gunned to death by the police.

These are not the only political prisoners in Nicaragua. It is a poor country with a long history of guerrilla struggle by the poor, going back to the famous guerrilla leader Augusto Cesar Sandino, killed by the father of the present President in 1934 on the direct orders of the US Consul in Nicaragua.

Other political prisoners, many of them members of the Sandinest Front for National Liberation, the present-day guerrilla organization, are housed in the dungeons of Somoza's mansion itself, according to Prensa Latina's Rafael Flores.

They may have been safe from the earthquake but not from Somoza's police, who from reports smuggled out by the prisoners, have tortured prisoners there.

The Mexican TV report concludes with the arrival of General Somoza to his mansion. The Mexican reporter tells him about the starving people he met on the road from the airport.

Clean-shaven, in his yellow uniform, Somoza replies, "Oh, that was the Venezuelan aid brigade. They decided not to distribute their food supplies."

And then with narrowed eyes he adds, "But there is no cause for complaint. All those protesters should have been already evacuated from the city."

The TV documentary ends with a shot of a totally dark Managua, "in the midst of its longest night."

Revise God

Sir,
Heaven bothers me. Perhaps, it's because I am fearful of heights and am afraid of falling through the clouds. I just don't know. The constant playing of harps (to plagiarize Mark Twain) must get on the angels' nerves. It must be quite a Hell. Oh, Hell must be quite a Heaven in comparison to this. But Heaven bothers me for other reasons as well. If men should aim to go to Heaven, then being in Heaven must be better than living on Earth. Now if God is a good God, why didn't he allow all of us to live in the better place (i.e. Heaven) from the very beginning rather than the worst place? It seems to me that God is something of the masochist here. He just likes to see men suffer. Oh yes, you talk about the bountiful creation of God as being a good thing. Well, that's your opinion. I guess that you're an artist and look upon bountifulness as being a good thing. But as for me I'd sooner hear the repetition of harps all day for twenty billion years than live on Earth. And since I am an egotist, I must say that I find my opinion much more valid than I find yours. Yes, the world would be a better place if God got rid of men and made them all angels. But other things about Heaven also bother me. I keep on wondering why the Devil had the choice of leaving Heaven while the saints do not (for if saints did have such a choice then one would assume that some if not most of them would have followed the advice of God's 'head' angel and left for other lands. And if such were the case then the saints we pray to might really be devils which would cause an awful lot of trouble in our churches). I can only wonder whether when people die they lose their freedom. But let me leave Heaven now—since I am a free agent—and deal with other things. I know that people say that this is the best of all possible worlds. And I must say that I really wonder. I can certainly imagine a better world. I can only assume that it is the best of all possible worlds for God only since, as far as I know, it isn't the best of all possible worlds for any man. And here the question arises whether this doesn't show God's egotism. What I mean is whether it wouldn't be better for all concerned, if our world were more like the People's Republic of China i.e. where the ruler was forced to take more account of the people's individual dreams. I realize that this would be Communism but so what? For too long have religious people damn'd Communism for being anti-God without realizing that Communism was a doctrine which was anti-God only because God, like everybody else, was in need of improvement. I am only saying that if God would spend a little bit more time listening to our requests our world might really be a much better place in which to live. What I am really asking for is just a little bit more dialogue and less tyranny which really doesn't seem to be asking for very much.

A Sexist Gimmick

Sir,
This "Super Pub-nite" advertised in the McGill Daily of January 30/73 boasts "Girls in groups of 5 or more are let in FREE." The turnouts of both sexes has never been that unequal so as to justify such a sexist gimmick. The originators of such covert sexism are maintaining the disguised and acceptable double standard toward sexes which puts women at a different level from men. These people running the "Super Pub-nite" are probably sensitive towards overt sexism; they should now recognize and work on eliminating undesirable, covert, sexist behavior.

Vietnamese Broomball

Sir,
To satisfy those of your readers who feel the need for reports on Vietnam and at the same time please those who wish to see greater coverage of sports events, may I suggest a solution? Detailed coverage of Vietnamese sports events (from a Marxist-Leninist viewpoint, of course) would be the answer. I look forward with great anticipation to your analysis of the forthcoming Vietnamese broomball championships, to be played on the frozen wastes of the Mekong Delta.

Plumber's Complaint

Sir,
In response to this Thursday's Grinder and Martone:

Why is that student dirty and smelly, foul-mouthed and bleary eyed? Because he has been up all night working, because he is an engineer.

What do engineers do when they work all night? They build models and read books.

Why do engineers spend their nights building models and reading books? Because if they didn't spend their time this way they would spend it masturbating, and Mommy told them masturbation is bad. Engineers must have something to do with their hands.

What do they read about in books; why do they build models? Because they want to be able to build things.

What sort of things do they want to build? A masturbation machine.

Why haven't they succeeded? Because they are engineers. Besides, they do have a working model of a crude type of masturbation machine. It is called "The Plumber's Pot".

Don't they know that nature has already devised the perfect substitute for a masturbation machine? It is called "woman". Of course they know.

Then why don't they spend more time with women? Because women don't want to spend time with them.

Why not? Because they are dirty and smelly, foul-mouthed and bleary-eyed, and stay up all night building models and reading books. Also, because they read—and write—the "Plumber's Pot". But mainly, because they are engineers.

Petty insults, petty details

Sir,
Mr. Roxburgh has written a letter in which, if you care to wade through the petty insults, he claims the McGill Progressive Conservatives are trying to obscure the issues of the Viet Nam resolution by complaining that our rights have been transgressed.

We in the club agree that Viet Nam is an important issue, so important that our views should not be misrepresented. This Council has misrepresented our views. Council was not elected on the Viet Nam issue, nor was a referendum held. Council still thought that it should decide what students should think.

It could be said that Mr. Roxburgh is confusing the issue and doesn't want people to complain when their rights are thrown to the winds. Council has no right to say what students think until it has asked them what they really do think. Even then they should say how many voted this way or that.

The government of Canada, when asked, doesn't pretend to represent all Canadians, especially minority governments. But this compares responsible government to Students' Council, an idea worthy of Mr. Roxburgh.

But if you still feel we have done wrong come to our next meeting and express your views. We'll listen. However we will still want to talk about petty details like human rights.

A Progressive Conservative in thought and deed,

Bob Mison

P.S. Mr. Roxburgh, bring your Liberal membership card.

amalgamate with the MCFC and assured them that within 10 days to two weeks a permit and insurance could be obtained for the children's new centre. He also requested that the group meet with him tomorrow to arrange the matter more completely.

Resolving the situation in such a manner would "only be advantageous to the original 19 families and wouldn't in any way meet the needs of the workers at McGill, students and community surrounding McGill," claimed Dixon.

he's a real —er," chuckled Dr. Frost. "Don't let any of those brats on the McGill Daily get hold of any of this shit," he continued, "or they'll wipe my nose in it."

New Scout Hired

Sam Pollock, the genial former hockey scout, has assumed the position of Chief Scout (Academic), Principal Robert Bell announced yesterday at a small informal gathering at the Faculty Club.

From his office in the F. Cyril James Building, which was rather chaotic due to movers' bustling in and out with the memorabilia of his long, distinguished career with the Montreal Canadiens, Pollock said, "I think it should be relatively easy, so to speak, to make the transition from the world of sport to the world of academia. A good example of someone who was able to combine both of these fields, with the same two institutions by the way, is Ken Dryden."

Referring to his activities as McGill's new chief scout, Mr. Pollock hinted that he had already lined up several promising young lab demonstrators who could be involved in a package deal for one of McGill's renowned Canadian novelists who has been in a slump of late.

A reliable source stated that Pollock is working on a trade that would send Vice-Principal Stanley Frost to Whittier College in return for its entire graduating class of 1981 and future considerations.

During Mr. Pollock's career with the Canadiens, he was responsible for hiring players such as Rocket Richard, our own Ken Dryden, Gump Worsley and many others. We wish him the best of luck in his new post and are looking forward to covering his exciting career at McGill.

NOTICES

CHANGE OF COURSE

All changes of course must now be approved by the Director of Political Opinions, the Reverend Dr. Franley Stost. Students desiring changes in their programs must appear at the office with all papers, including a loyalty oath, and $5 to cover Dr. Stost's expenses. The Reverend Stost may be contacted at his office in the F. Serious James Building or through the Anti-Terrorist Squad.

From Our Mailbag

To my dear and loyal subject, Principal Bell,

It has come to our attention that you will soon have an opening in your Humanities Department for a professor acquainted with certain statistical aspects of political science.

If I might be so unprincipled (our life is terribly boring and those little puns do help so), might I recommend my husband Philip as an interim replacement until something more permanent can be arranged? He is so very clever, as you know, and what with our finances strained to the utmost by our forthcoming trip to Canada, we could certainly use the extra money his lecturing would bring.

Also, since we will be in Canada at the time, the cost of commuting will be minimal.

Please consider my proposal seriously, and inform me by return post of your intentions. I remain your sovereign majesty.

Elizabeth II (or Betty to you)
Dei Gratia Regina,
Defender of the Faith,
Keeper of the Purse Strings, & c.

Cher M. Bell,

Please consider me for the position in your political science department that will soon become open. As you may know, I am well versed in the art of politics and could show your students a thing or two.

My motive in seeking this position is simply that government is a risky business (v. Pierre Laporte) and that one can never really have enough money. I did, after all, marry that girl from the Simard family, whatever her name is.

I hope to hear from you before the provincial grants officer examines your request for funding for the next academic year.

As always,
Votre confrère,
Bou Bou

Mr. Bell, our honoured and distinguished ally,

There is a rumour in Washington that a very sensitive position in the political science department is about to open up. I would appreciate it if you would confer with me before appointing anyone to that post. As you know, we must struggle together to uphold the freedom of the Western World and the Free Enterprise System and all those things that we hold dear.

Please don't forget that we supply a great part of the research money at your university.

From a humble man who became President and forgot his humility,

R.M. Nixon

Mammoth Work

Charlie C. Curd, editor of McGill Fuse, has published an article in his newspaper. David Mammoth is the author. The article is an illegitimate exercise into the fundamental aspects of co-functional genesis of modern political and politicized tracts. Mammoth has an interesting thesis to offer. According to his well thought-out view, there is a perennial and symbiotic relationship between journalism and prostitution. In the interbehavioural context, it is quite clear that the thesis is unquestionably correct. Take the example of Mammoth himself. He marketed himself with untold emotional (asexual) and material satisfaction. And the result? A quality of journalism that evokes deep-seated responses in the clean minds of administrative and professional beings.

David Mammoth, whose commitment to the Montreal Gazette's Financial Section keeps him unusually pre-occupied, had to depend for doing the research on another able journalist. The reviewer expresses his inability to recall the latter's name (and apologies). This, however, in no way, and under any circumstances, should indicate that the professional (prostitudinal) ability of the journalist concerned is in question.

In brief, the two journalists, in com-licity with a third one, have produced a memorable work. The worth of this work may not be evident to all of us all of the time. But to some of the beings it brings untold emotional (asexual) satisfaction and material reward.
